

ON THE PHILOSOPHICAL DEVELOPMENT OF KURT GÖDEL

MARK VAN ATTEN^a AND JULIETTE KENNEDY

Dedicated to the memory of Karl Schuhmann (1941–2003)

CONTENTS

1. Introduction	426
2. Gödel's position in the 1950's—a stalemate	428
2.1. Inconclusive arguments	428
2.2. Realism and rationalism	430
2.3. Epistemological parity	434
2.4. A way out?	437
3. Gödel's turn to Husserl's transcendental idealism	439
3.1. Varieties of idealism	439
3.2. Gödel and German Idealism	440
3.3. The turn to Husserl's transcendental idealism	443
3.4. Gödel's criticisms of Husserl's idealism	453
4. How is the turn related to Leibniz?	455
4.1. Phenomenology as a methodical monadology	455
4.2. Searching for the primitive terms	458
5. Comparison with earlier interpretations	460
6. Influence from Husserl on Gödel's writings	464
6.1. On the schools in the foundations of mathematics	464
6.2. The given	465
6.3. Revisions in the main text of the Cantor paper	467
7. Gödel's assessment of his philosophical project	470
Acknowledgements	471

Received June 22, 2003; revised June 25, 2003.

^aDuring the preparation of this paper, Mark van Atten was supported by a postdoctoral grant from the Fund for Scientific Research-Flanders (Belgium).

© 2003, Association for Symbolic Logic
1079-8986/03/0904-0001/$6.20